A key question regarding these two tasks is whether they can be used interchangeably as a measure of WM. From a conceptual standpoint, the two tasks involve different cognitive processes.

Cross-Stitch Networks for Multi-Task Learning

Consider a case of multi task learning with two tasks A and B on the same input image. For the sake of explanation, consider two networks that have been trained separately for these tasks. We propose a new unit, cross-stitch unit, that combines these two networks into a multi-task network in a way such that the tasks supervise how much sharing.
